North Carolina Radon Program Updates

Successes: Student Practicums!

In 2025 the NC Radon Program engaged six MPH students in conducting practicums with the aim of providing local community health assessments (CHA) with data and resources at the local level. In the past year, students from UNC Gillings School of Public Health participated in additional practicums.

The outcome has been a robust submission to the Occupational and Environmental Epidemiology dashboard for data management and technical assistance as well as to the NC Data Portal that is utilized by NC community health assessments. This both increases the awareness of radon in the public health arena and allows the NC Radon Program to use the students' expertise in completing tasks.
